The transition within business—from a linear to a circular economy—brings with it a range of practical challenges for companies. This paper develops a framework of strategies to guide designers and business strategists in the move from a profit-driven model to a circular economy model. The authors analyze the strategies employed by different companies and organizations, highlighting the challenges and potential solutions. The paper concludes with recommendations for companies looking to transition to a circular economy model.